MISCELLANEOUS.

(From the Kennebec Journal.) HARRY OF THE WEST.

From Northern hill, from Southern vale,
From Western wild and prairie,
On morning breeze and evening gale,
Swells one loud shout for Harry!
Responsive to the cheering call,
High beats the patriot's breast;
Then rouse, ye freemen, one and all,
For Harry of the West!

The prettiest girls in all the land
Have vowed they ne'er will marry
The men who have not hearts to stand
Or fall with gallant Harry!
And would you hask in beauty's light,
And with her love be blest?
Then up, and battle for the right, And HARRY OF THE WEST!

When dangers hovered o'er our land,
And Matty, sly and wary,
Was plotting with the federal band,
Where then was gallant HARRY?
Go search ye the historic page—
He well can stand the test; Then rally for the Patriot Sage For HARRY OF THE WEST!

When Greece, no longer bowed in shame, Was struggling to be free— When her wide wasted land became One vast Thermopyle—
When, from each gory hill and glen,
There came her loud request—
Who plead for Freedom's birth-place then,
Like Harry of the West?

When brooding in the Southern sky
Was seen the gathering storm—
When foul Disunion reared on high
Her dark and hideous form— Who was our only hope? on whom Did then our country rest? What star dispell'd the midnight gloom? 'Twas Harry of the West!

Now Freedom's starry flag unroll'd,
Floats gaily in the breeze;
Emblazon'd on each azure fold,
Her eye with rapture sees
The well-loved name of him, whose voice
Plead for her sons oppress'd;
Then who should be a freeman's choice, But HARRY OF THE WEST?

For the Whig Standard.

A SKETCH.

Years have rolled by since in the backwoods of the mighty West there appeared a tall, spare, sinewy youth, with a bright, flashing eye, who, tho' modest and unassuming, seemed like one born with the innate power to become distinguished among men. Time rolled on, and still he performed no act, decisive and great, sufficient to set the seal of genius upon him. But at last it came—the waters long pent up gushed out—the fire which has ever burnt within becomes manifest to all-and genius, true, inborn, is universally conceded to him. Years pass by, and he becomes more and more known and admired, till, called by his State to speak in its behalf, he stands upon upon the floor of the American Congress. Then, for the first time, the world heard his burning and thrilling eloquence—then they saw another and a brighter star added to the diadem of the new continent. But his career stops not here. The force of his mighty genius urges him on, and he mounts the great ladder of fame higher and higher. He is deputed by his country to serve her abroad, and the tall, sinewy Kentuckian meets in council with the learned, crafty, and experienced diplomats of Europe. Success crowns his efforts, and he returns to his kindred only to receive new honors. Fortune leads him forward, until now, age having silvered his locks, with the native fire of his eye undimmed, we behold him, having filled the highest office in the cabinet of the President, taking leave of the Senate, bidding farewell to public life, leaving behind the honors and emoluments of office, turning from the scene of his greatness, the theatre of his glory, to rest awhile from his labors in that Western land from whence he came.

Few orators have equalled, none have surpassed, the brilliancy and sweetness of his elo-quence. In national knowledge—in vigor and power of thought-in statesmanship he stood almost alone, and none but the Northern Goliath might even rival him. A true nobleman of na-ture, "none knew him but to love him," for his frank, noble, and warmhearted spirit melted the hardest soul. Wherever he came the people gathered by thousands to do him honor, and often ne enjoyed a greater than a Roman triumph in the free and unsought homage of a people who call no man lord.

Harry of the West, now, having served his country faithfully, and as none other could, during a long life, approaches the evening of his days. America may well be proud of him, fer he is her brightest jewol. But though America—all America may call him her son, yet he belongs particularly to the great Whig party; for them he has toiled, his counsel and assistance have ever been freely bestowed upon them, and their honors have been given to him. Still there lack-eth one thing: America owes it to herself to place in the chair of her Presidency a man worthy to stand by the side of her heroes, her Presi dents of the olden time-a man capable of under standing and carrying out the just designs of Gov-erment—a man who shall reflect as much honor upon his station as his office confers upon him, for it is indeed a long, long time since a true statesman, worthy of being held up before the world as her favorite son, her greatest man, her freely elected ruler, has administered our Government. She owes it to him also—to Henry Clay—the man never weary of well doing in her behalf, to immortalize his name by placing it in the same rank with George Washington and his glorious compeers. And she will do it. Already she is awakening from her lethargy, and prepar-ing to confer on him her noblest gift. Whereso-ever his name is mentioned, the favor, the enthusiasm of the people in his behalf becomes evident. Tennessee, Georgia, North Carolina, and Maryland, have flung his banner to the breeze, and, fighting under that standard, have achieved a victory which is but the preliminary to their greater victory, when they arrive at the contest which victory, when they arrive at the contest, which will make him President of the United States, and cause a nation to rejoice. Then will no Ameri-can, abroad or at home, blush to make mention of can, abroad or at home, blush to make mention of his Chief Magistrate, but honest pride shall fill his soul as he speaks of "the great President," Henry Clay. Let not Connecticult falter now—let her march forward, as of old, and now, if ever, let her show her sister States her strength.—When the favored son shall finally and forever retire from office, and resign to the people again the last great charge, his brilliant sun shall set bright and beautiful, and while America shall embalm his memory in her heart of hearts, the balm his memory in her heart of hearts, the world will remember and honor the name of A Young WHIG. HENRY CLAY.

PRICE TEN CENTS PER WEEK.

THE FAKIR OF AVA.

THE FAKIR OF AVA, or as he facetiously terms himself, the "Prince of Humbugs," is creating quite a sensation in Philadelphia. The following notice of one of the feats recently performed by him, is copied from a paper of that city:

"He borrowed a large mouse colored shawl from one of the ladies, placed it in apparently a brass case, similar to a canister, and laid it on the table; he then gave out some dozen of plain cards for gentlemen to write where they wished it sent to, and when collected, one was drawn promiscuously, which one contained the destination to which the Fakir was to have it "transmogrified." The gentleman who wrote on the card, and who is well known in this city, accompanied by two others took a hack, which was waiting at the door, and proceeded to the spot as fast as horse-power could carry them. Some eight or ten minutes after the "committee of three" had departed, the Fakir caused the shawl to vanish from before the audience, and be spirited through the air to the aforesaid destination. One of the figures that stands in front of Mr. Blight's mansion, at the corner of Sakunkill Vanish. sion, at the corner of Schuylkill Seventh and sion, at the corner of Schuylkill Seventh and Chesnut streets, was the place selected by the gentleman that the shawl should be conveyed to. As the figure represented a female, the Fakir, after the committee had gone about six minutes, asked the audience whether they wanted the shawl laid on the figure in a lump or spread around the shoulders—the latter was chosen.—When they returned, the gentleman who wrote on the card had the shawl in his possession, and stated that he had found it wrapped about the shoulders of the figure. This was all accomplishes shoulders of the figure. This was all accomplished in about twenty-two minutes, the distance being about three quarters of a mile, and clearly proved to all present that "some things can be done as well as others." What will the Fakir do next ?"

By the way, we have heard of a more remarkable feat than this, said to have been performed in this city. A public functionary, it is said, so effectually spirited away some hundreds of thousands of the public money, a few years ago, that it has not yet been found-at least by the rightful owners.
